A Season in the Limelight

This baseball season, all eyes will be focused on Boston.

They will watch the defending American League Champion Red Sox take the field each day striving to retain their hard-won title.

They will witness Cy Young/MVP winner Roger Clemens take the mound once a week in his quest to repeat his past season's stellar performance.

And they will also see a city salute the 75th Anniversary of Fenway Park, baseball's most cherished ballpark.

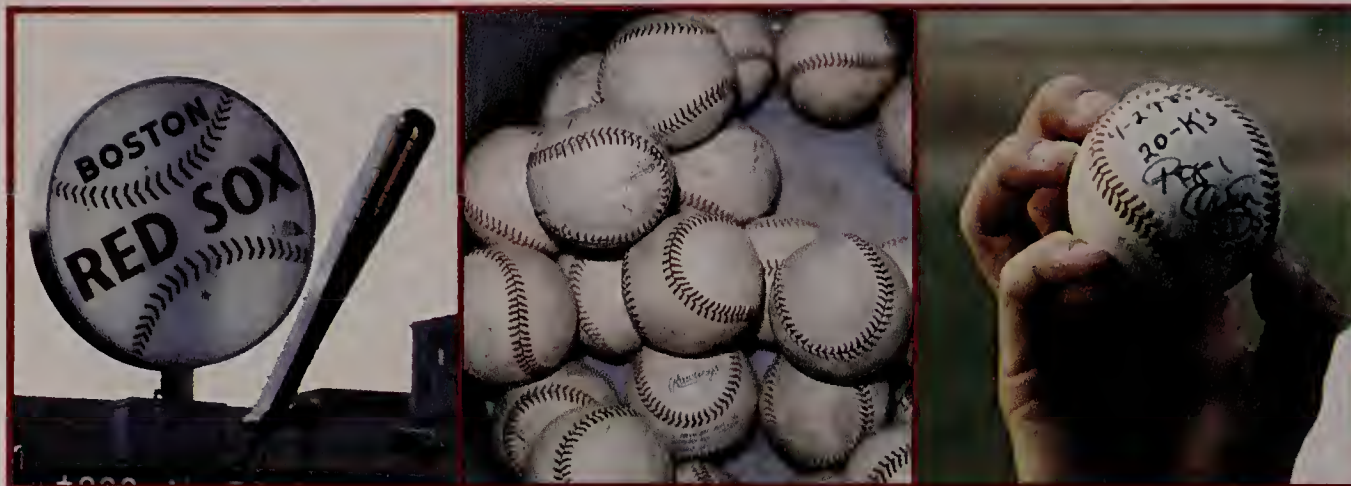

The 1987 Yearbook is your guide to this special season.

Every player on the 1987 Red Sox is profiled — those who contributed to 1986's championship season, and those who hope to play key roles in the future. Special two-page photo spreads are dedicated to Clemens and fellow all-stars Jim Rice and Wade Boggs. And Fenway Park's history is recorded in words and art in the feature article, "Forever Fenway."

Although the Yearbook's purpose is to highlight the current season's team, we must first pause to toast a very important group of people who helped bring the championship back to Boston. All the Red Sox — the players, coaches, front office personnel, and behind-the-scenes staff — wish to extend a sincere "thank you" to you, our fans, for your continued loyal support. From Winter Haven to "20 K," from the pennant clincher to Appreciation Day — your inspiration carried the club.

We hope you enjoy your 1987 Red Sox Yearbook and what we all anticipate to be a very special season of baseball in Boston.

Boston Red Sox Affirmative Action Policy

The Red Sox will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, religion, color, sex, age, national origin, or ancestry. The Red Sox will take affirmative action to insure that such individuals are treated during their employment without regard to race, religion, color, sex, age, national origin, or ancestry. Such action shall include but not be limited to the following: hiring, upgrading, demotion, transfer, recruitment, layoff, rates of pay, all other forms of compensation, and selection for training.

Personnel procedures and practices with regard to training, promotion, transfer, compensation, demotion, layoff, or termination are to be administered with due regard to job performance, experience and qualifications, but without discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, age, national origin, or ancestry.

It is the policy of the Red Sox that in the process of recruitment for and appointment to the work force qualified minority group candidates will be encouraged to apply.

The Red Sox will not discriminate against any rehabilitated employee or applicant because of previous psychiatric treatment and/or confinement in a mental health facility. Employment will not be denied for such medical history unless there is a bonafide occupational qualification which precludes employment. Additionally, the Red Sox will not discriminate against any rehabilitated employee or applicant for employment because of physical handicap unless there is a bonafide occupational qualification which precludes employment.

The Red Sox will not discriminate against qualified minority-owned vendors and suppliers, including suppliers of both professional and non-professional services. The Red Sox will request that its vendors and suppliers submit assurance of their commitments to the goal of equal employment opportunity. The Red Sox will not discriminate in the leasing of commercial space.

Any Red Sox employee judged to be in willful and deliberate non-compliance with this equal opportunity policy will be subject to disciplinary action.

The Front Office

Jean R. Yawkey

Jean R. Yawkey is a general partner and president of the Red Sox, a position she has held for the past 12 years. Mrs. Yawkey succeeded her husband, Tom, as president in 1976. A Red Sox enthusiast, she attends virtually every home game in her familiar rooftop box, where for years she watched by her husband's side.

Tom Yawkey was the sole owner of the team for 44 seasons, longer than any one owner in history. He transformed the Red Sox from one of baseball's weakest franchises to among the healthiest, while creating a New England institution. He also rebuilt Fenway Park into a charming and cozy landmark.

Mrs. Yawkey holds the distinction of being the first woman to be elected a director of the Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum in Cooperstown, NY.

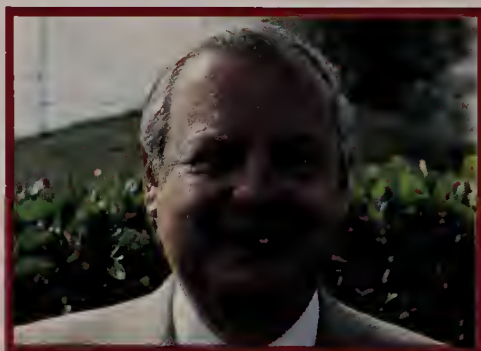

Haywood C. Sullivan

Haywood C. Sullivan is a Red Sox general partner and the club's chief executive officer/chief operating officer. He was named to that position in June, 1984 after having served since October, 1977 as executive vice president and general manager in charge of baseball matters. He was also a principal in the group that purchased the club from the Yawkey Estate in May, 1978.

Sullivan, 56, is a baseball success story—a one-time reserve catcher who rose from dugout to ownership of the team.

Following two years of Army service with the 82nd Division, 101st Airborne and Adjutant General Corps in 1953-55, Sullivan was plagued by an aching back that eventually required disc surgery in 1958. The 6'4", 210-pounder played in only 60 games over parts of four seasons for the 1955-57 and '59-'60 Red Sox before retiring to manage in the minors. Two seasons later he was back with the Kansas City A's as their manager in 1965, leaving at year's end to rejoin the Red Sox as a vice president in charge of player personnel—at age 35, one of baseball's youngest top executives. Within a year, after eight sub-.500 seasons, the Red Sox became contenders and have remained so under the leadership of Sullivan, an architect of Boston's exciting 1967, 1975 and 1986 pennant-winners. Sullivan was named the American League's top executive in 1981 in a poll by United Press International.

James (Lou) Gorman

James (Lou) Gorman is running the Red Sox baseball corporation for the fourth year. On June 5, 1984 he was promoted to vice president and general manager. He came to the club from the N.Y. Mets on February 1, 1984 when he was named vice president and director of baseball operations. In his position as general manager of the Red Sox, Gorman handles all matters relating to the operation of the major league ballclub on the field as well as the overall responsibility for the procurement and development of player talent within the organization. In 1986 Gorman's trade moves and roster building came to fruition as the Red Sox won the A.L. pennant for the first time since 1975.

It was a return to his roots for Gorman, who grew up in Providence, RI as a "died in the wool" Red Sox fan. Lou graduated from LaSalle Academy in Providence, earned his A.B. degree at Stonehill College in No. Easton, MA, and his Master's Degree in Education at Bridgewater State in Bridgewater, MA. He also attended Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. to obtain a Master's Degree in English. In 1978 he was honored by Stonehill College as the "Outstanding Alumnus of the Year." He is currently on the board of advisors at Stonehill College.

Just prior to joining the Red Sox, Gorman spent 3 1/2 years with the New York Mets as vice president and director of baseball operations. During his tenure with the Mets the franchise developed outstanding major league talent like Darryl Strawberry, Dwight Gooden, and Ron Darling. The Mets were also honored with back-to-back awards as the Major League Organization of the Year.

Lou serves on the Major League Amateur Study Committee, the Major League College and High School Committee, and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Major League Scouting Bureau. He is also on the board of visitors of Massachusetts Maritime Academy and the Science/Management Council at Bridgewater State College.

34 BILL FISCHER Pitching Coach

The Red Sox had one of the best pitching staffs in the majors in 1986 and pitching coach Bill Fischer was a key factor in the success. Bill, a diligent worker in his third year with the club, advocates "throwing strikes." His troops finished last season first in fewest walks, second in strikeouts, and tied for third in ERA, the best overall achievement by a Red Sox staff in many years.

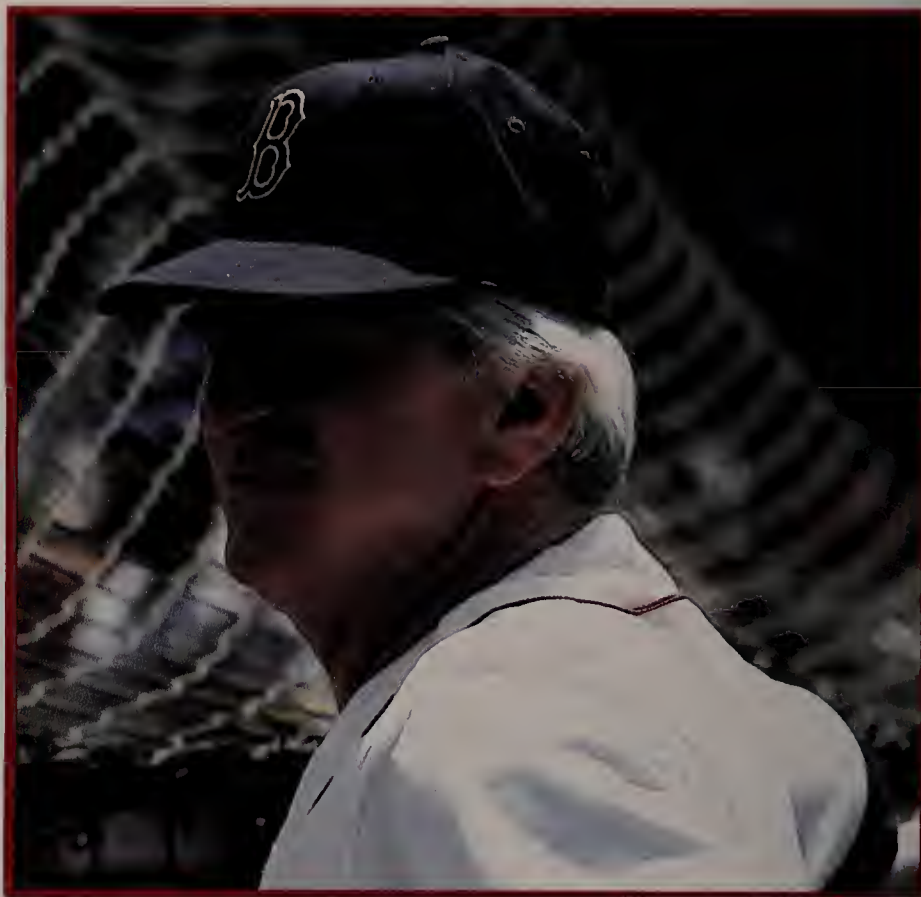

Greatest accomplishment in baseball: Setting major league record for most innings (84 1/3) without allowing a walk

Best baseball player today, excluding teammates: Don Mattingly Best baseball player ever: Babe Ruth Best athlete in pro sports today: Dave Winfield (N.Y. Yankees)

Most embarrassing moment of career: Being taken out of a game with no balls and two strikes on the batter Worst habit: Smoking New Year's resolution: Quit smoking Goal for 1987: To have five 20-game winners on the Sox Plans after baseball: I hope my baseball career is never over.

FAVORITES . . .

Vacation spot: Hawaii Movie: The Longest Day TV show: Alfred Hitchcock Sport other than baseball: Football Athlete other than baseball: Phil Simms (N.Y. Giants) because he took a lot of abuse and proved his critics wrong Team other than baseball: New York Giants Car: Chrysler Non-sports magazine: Farmer's Almanac Book: Yeager Topic of conversation: Sports

1 JOHN MCNAMARA Manager

The Red Sox overcame the dire predictions of most baseball experts to win the 1986 American League pennant and come within one out of the World Series title in the hectic seven-game meeting with the New York Mets. John McNamara's perseverance and desire to win were important ingredients in the team's success formula.

McNamara's Red Sox moved into first place on May 15 and never relinquished this position. The Red Sox finished 95-66 to win their first Eastern Division title since 1975 and came from a three-to-one game deficit to overtake the California Angels in the ALCS for the right to meet the Mets.

In July, McNamara was rewarded with a two-year extension of his contract and a selection as a coach on the American League All-Star Team. At season's end he was voted A.L. Manager of the Year by the Baseball Writers Association of America and co-Major League Manager of the Year with the Astros' Hal Lanier by The Sporting News.

McNamara is starting his 14th full year as a major league manager, and only Sparky Anderson (Detroit) and Gene Mauch (Angels) hold seniority over him among A.L. managers. As the 36th manager of the Red Sox, McNamara enters 1987 with a major league record of 927-952, including 424-398 in his five years in the American League.

Greatest accomplishment in baseball: Being employed in pro baseball every year since 1951 (except '53-'54 when I was in the army) Best baseball player today, excluding teammates: Don Mattingly Best baseball player ever: Ted Williams Best athlete in pro sports today: Wayne Gretzky Most embarrassing moment of career: Trying to answer this question Worst habit: Chewing tobacco New Year's resolution: I don't make them Goal for 1987: To win the World Series Plans after baseball: To lie six feet under

FAVORITES . . .

Vacation spot: My home Movie: The Wizard of Oz TV show: Sports Sport other than baseball: Football Athlete other than baseball: Vince Lombardi, because of his personality and leadership ability Team other than baseball: San Francisco 49'ers Car: One that's paid for Non-sports magazine: Time Book: Shogun Topic of conversation: Baseball (amen!)

Now Panasonic shakes the walls even where there are none. Introducing XBS stereos with extra bass.

The earth seems to tremble in the wake of a pulsating bass guitar. You feel the low-pitched wail of a tenor sax hit you somewhere in the bottom of your soul. You're listening to the new extra-bass system in Panasonic XBS radio cassette recorders.

Punch a button. Special amplification kicks in, and you'll feel an extra blast of bass come from a pair of sub-woofers. They make bass notes sound so low they seem to come from underground. And these special speakers are just part of a sophisticated 6-speaker system.

The new Panasonic XBS portable stereos come with a lot more extras than just extra bass. The RX-C38, shown below, and the mini RX-FM40 both come with an auto-reverse cassette recorder as well as an equalizer for extra control over the sound. And, of course, both portables come with an AM/FM stereo tuner.

So when you hear rock and roll that seems to shake the walls, even where there are none, don't get rattled. It's just one of the new Panasonic XBS portable stereos with extra bass.

Panasonic.
just slightly ahead of our time.

WALT HRINIAK

First Base Coach

This is Walt Hriniak's 11th season as a Red Sox coach. He is the club's hitting instructor and first base coach, the latter role given to him by manager John McNamara last year. A keen student of the game, Hriniak is still recognized as one of the best batting practice pitchers in baseball despite surgery for shoulder problems. Before joining the Red Sox in 1977 Hriniak put in 16 years as a player, coach, and minor league manager.

Greatest accomplishment in baseball: Being in the World Series Best baseball player today, excluding teammates: Don Mattingly Best baseball player ever: Willie Mays Best athlete in pro sports today: Mike Jordan Goal for 1987: To work as hard as I can

FAVORITES ...

Vacation spot: Mountains of New Hampshire and Vermont Movie: Patton
Sport other than baseball: Boxing Athletes other than baseball: Boxer Joe Fraser and Walter Payton (Chicago Bears), because they never give up Topic of conversation: Hitting 35

JOE MORGAN

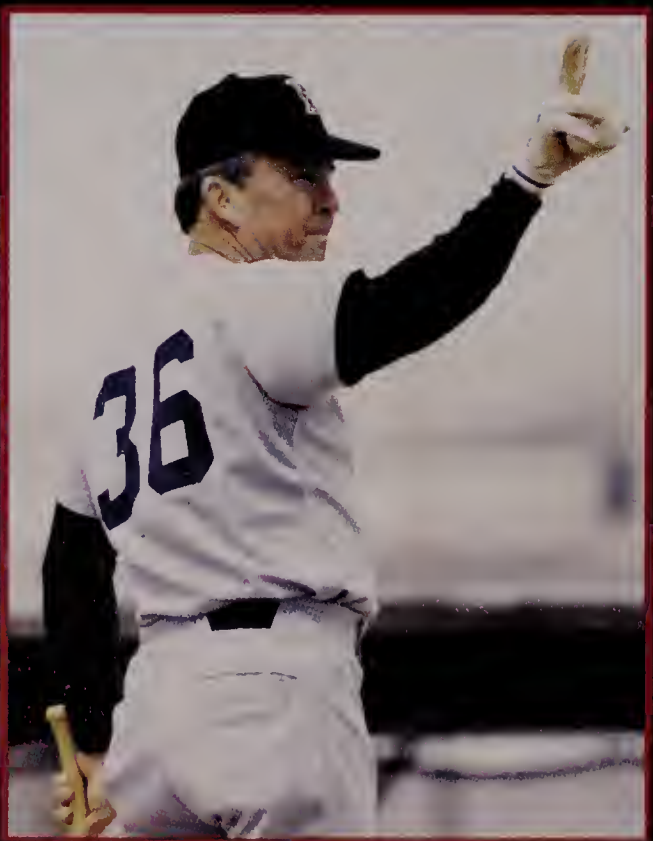

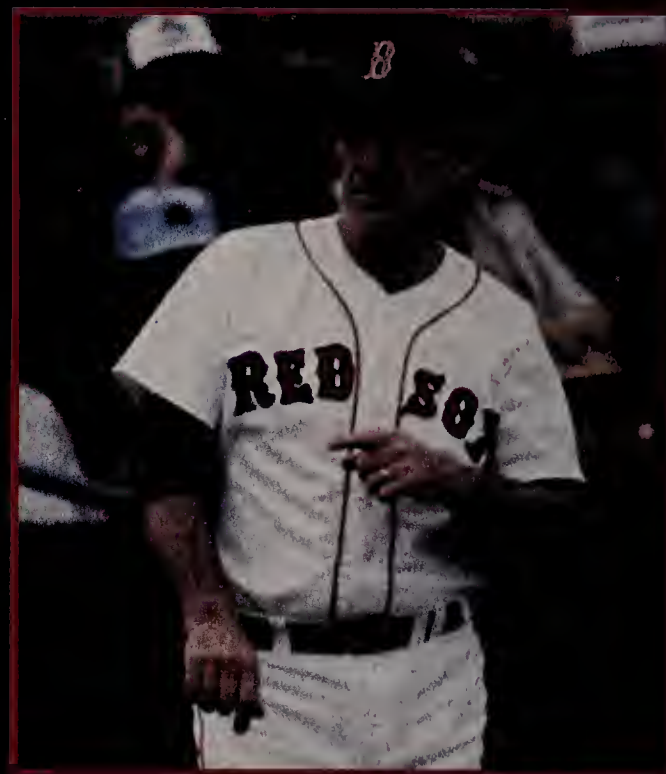

Third Base Coach

Now in his 36th professional year, Joe Morgan joined the Red Sox as first base coach in 1985 after spending two years as a Boston scout. Joe became bullpen coach in 1986 and is taking over the third base coaching position this season. Morgan joined the Red Sox organization in 1974 and managed Pawtucket (AAA) from 1974-82. In 1977 he was voted International League Manager of the Year.

Greatest accomplishment in baseball: Making the big leagues Best baseball player today, excluding teammates: Don Mattingly Best baseball player ever: Babe Ruth Most embarrassing moment of career: Striking out four times in one game in triple-A New Year's resolution: For the Sox to repeat as A.L. Champs Goals for 1987: To do a good job for the team Plans after baseball: I hope my baseball career is never over.

FAVORITES ...

Vacation spot: Cape Cod Movie: Drums Along the Mohawk TV show: 60 Minutes Sport other than baseball: Hunting Athlete other than baseball and why: Larry Bird, because of his great determination Team other than baseball: Boston College Eagles Car: Anything that runs Topic of conversation: Racing

36

Bullpen Coach

1987 is Rac Slider's first season as a major league coach. He spent the last 26 in the Red Sox system as a player, manager, and instructor. He managed Pawtucket (AAA) in 1985 and New Britain (AA) in 1983-84. He led New Britain to the Eastern League championship in 1983 and also produced pennants at Greenville (1970) and Winter Haven (1979). Slider was named Manager of the Year in 1970 and 1979.

Greatest accomplishment in baseball: Being a part of lots of players' big league success. Best baseball player today, excluding your teammates: Don Mattingly Best baseball player ever: Ted Williams Best athlete in pro sports today: Eric Dickerson (L.A. Rams) Worst habit: Overeating New Year's resolution: I didn't make any because I can't seem to keep them Goal for 1987: Being on a winner with the Sox Plans after baseball: To sit under a tree and watch the grass grow

FAVORITES ...

Vacation spots: At home on my farm in Texas; Winter Haven Movie: The Sound of Music TV show: Murder, She Wrote Sport other than baseball: Golf Athlete other than baseball: Danny White (Dallas Cowboys)—he seems to have less talent than most quarterbacks, but he still wins Team other than baseball: Dallas Cowboys Car: Ford Non-sports magazine: Farm Journal Book: The Miracle Topics of conversation: Cattle and baseball

The 1987 Red Sox

Baseball is above all a team sport. For a team to reach the top, each player must understand his assignment and make personal sacrifices. As demonstrated by the Red Sox players in 1986, a total team effort can produce championship results.

But baseball is also an individual's sport. Standing solitary in the field, on the mound, or at the plate, each player's unique contribution can be readily assessed. And on championship caliber clubs there are those rare individuals who rise to lead their team through personal example and demeanor. They exhibit exceptional performance on the field and exemplary persona off the field.

The Red Sox are fortunate to once again field a highly committed, unselfish team. And the club is also blessed with three of the best individual players in baseball today—1986 All-Stars Roger Clemens, Jim Rice, and Wade Boggs. With this trio's leadership and the collective talents of their mates, the 1987 club is poised for another competitive run at the pennant.

ROGER CLEMENS

Pitcher

Who could have predicted the kind of season Roger Clemens would have in 1986? Sure, the Sox thought he was capable of big things when they made him their #1 draft choice out of the U. of Texas in 1983 ... and when he was deemed capable of pitching in the majors after just 18 minor league starts. But Roger missed the final month of the 1984 season with an arm injury and was limited to 98 innings in '85 before submitting to shoulder surgery that seemed to jeopardize his future. And in spring training last year, his ERA ballooned to 9.00 late in March. Then, it happened. He struck out nine in seven innings in his final spring start, and before you could say "Smokey Joe," Clemens was off to an amazing 14-0 start, undefeated at the end of June. "The Rocket" finished at 24-4, while leading the A.L. in wins, winning percentage, and ERA (2.48). Along the way were more incredible feats: a major league record 20-strikeout performance against Seattle on April 29; three perfect innings, the win, and the MVP award in the All-Star Game; and 14 wins after a Red Sox loss which earned him the title of "stopper." Roger's season, certainly one of the greatest seasons by a Sox pitcher ever recorded, fittingly climaxed with his being named the 1986 winner of the A.L. Cy Young and Most Valuable Player Awards. For Roger Clemens it was a season for the ages, truly The Year of The Rocket.

JIM RICE

Outfielder

The legacy that is left field in the annals of Boston Red Sox history: Ted Williams, Carl Yastrzemski, and now, Jim Rice. That's 1,324 homeruns standing at the foot of the Green Monster since 1939, and Rice is still authoring his chapter of the legend. Last season was just another year for the Red Sox' captain. He hit .300 for the seventh time in his career, collected 200 hits for the fourth time, and drove in more than 100 runs for the eighth time and fourth year in a row. Almost obscured by the phenomenal success of the team were the personal milestones of Rice as he reached the 350-homerun and 2,000-hit plateaus for his career. In addition, Jim's 1,289 career RBI rank third in Sox history behind ... you guessed it ... Ted and Yaz. Of his 110 RBI in 1986, 40 of them tied the game or put the Sox ahead, attesting to his great ability in the clutch. Adding to his litany of honors, Rice was named to the A.L. All-Star Team for the eighth time in his career and capped off the season by finishing third (behind teammate Roger Clemens and Don Mattingly) in the league's MVP voting. Just another Jim Rice year.

WADE
BOGGS*Third Baseman

Every era has its ultimate hitter ... its master of the art ... its Picasso of Poke ... its author of the contemporary science of hitting a baseball. In the 80s, the Master is Wade Boggs. Five seasons into his career, Boggs has an astounding career batting average of .352. Only three players in the history of the game retired with better numbers: Ty Cobb, Rogers Hornsby, and Joe Jackson. In 1986, it was business as usual. "Chicken Man" won his third A.L. batting crown in the last four years by swatting a "routine" .357, and he became the first Sox player ever to collect 200 hits for four consecutive seasons. He also led the league in two more categories: walks (105) and on-base percentage (.453). In fact, Boggs became the first player to accumulate 200 hits and 100 walks in the same season since Stan Musial did it in 1953. Boggs' achievements were rewarded with a start in the All-Star Game, the first time he has been so honored. Best of all, he is only 28 years old. Many more chapters are left for Wade Boggs to write.

MARTY BARRETT

Second Baseman

It seems Marty Barrett has forever been tagged with the adjective "underrated." He was always the little guy, the underdog, the kind who would do most everything right without attracting much attention. Well, Marty Barrett caught some people's attention in 1986 and it's about time he was rated right where he belongs... among the best second basemen in the game today. During the regular season, Marty set career highs with his .286 average, 39 doubles, and 60 RBI. As usual, he gave the Sox consistent defense around the bag and maintained his reputation as the team's best bunter and hit-and-run guy. But it was in the post-season that the man known as "The Computer" (for his knowledge of game situations and opposing players) really strutted his "underrated" stuff. In the ALCS against California he hit .367 with several key hits and was named the series' Most Valuable Player. The magic continued throughout the World Series as he led the team with a .433 average against the Mets, giving him a post-season average of .400. For his terrific season and for his contributions to the good of the community, Marty received the 1986 BoSox Club Man of the Year Award.

BRUCE HURST

Pitcher

It was only a matter of time. For his first four full seasons in the major leagues, "potential" was the word most often heard regarding Bruce Hurst's career. A solid starter for those years? Yes. A bonafide star? Not yet. But if Bruce's second half performance in 1986 is any indication, the time has come for the 29-year-old lefthander to take his place among the top hurlers in the American League. Bruce was leading the loop in strikeouts when he suffered a severe groin injury on May 31, and then had two losing starts after six weeks on the shelf. But after that, Hurst went on an 8-3 tear, and was 5-0 with a 1.07 ERA in September. His brilliance carried over into the post-season, as he went 3-0 with a 2.13 ERA in five starts. Among Bruce's achievements in '86 were his 14-strikeout game on May 16 against Texas, his four other 11-strikeout games, and his four shutouts at Fenway Park. Apparently, Bruce Hurst's time has come.

AWARD-WINNING CONTROL.

Steve Stone, Chicago Cub announcer and 1980 Cy Young Award winner, talks about the Consort Control Pitcher Award.

"Last year was a great year for baseball and for Consort. After an exciting season, the first annual Consort Control Pitcher Award went to Mike Scott and Roger Clemens.

"Established in 1986 by

The Sporting News^{®†} and Consort, the Consort Control Pitcher Award is a rating system based on a starting pitcher's ERA, hits allowed, walks and strikeouts per nine innings as measured against the league average. I think it's the truest measure of a pitcher's skill today and Mike and Roger were certainly in control last year."

When it comes to control off the field, Steve turns to Consort.

"That's right. Consort always keeps my hair looking neat and in control. And now you can look in control, too, with Consort's wide selection of grooming products and a Consort 'I'm in Control' T-Shirt, just like mine.

When Dwight Evans hit the first pitch of the 1986 season (off Detroit's Jack Morris) for a homerun, Sox fans should have known they were in for quite a year. For 14 full seasons Evans has been providing just that kind of spark as the Sox' fixture in right field. In fact, only Carl Yastrzemski and Ted Williams have played more games in a Red Sox uniform. Evans's career can be encapsulated in the word consistency. He has hit over 20 homeruns in eight of the last nine seasons; he has drawn at least 70 walks in each of the last nine seasons; and he has won eight Gold Gloves since 1976 for his spectacular defensive play. And at age 35, Evans gave his typical all-round performance in 1986, banging 26 homers (including a three-run job for all the Sox' runs in Roger Clemens' 20-strikeout game) and finishing second to teammate Wade Boggs in the A.L. in walks (97). He may not have an encore for last year's first-pitch heroics, but can Sox fans expect yet another big season from their stylish right fielder? With dependable Dwight Evans, you can bet on it.

DON BAYLOR

Designated Hitter

The trade didn't at first appear to be a blockbuster... an innocent swap of veteran designated hitters, the Sox' Mike Easler for the Yankees' Don Baylor. But the first deal between the two arch-rivals in 14 years, consummated on March 28, turned out to be one of the keys to the Red Sox dream season. Not only did "The Judge" go on to win the American League Designated Hitter Award on the strength of his 31 homers and 94 RBI, but his immeasurable drive, professionalism, and leadership were continually cited as key spiritual ingredients in the Boston clubhouse that helped drive the team to the A.L. Championship. To these accomplishments, Don added the unusual distinction in 1986 of setting an A.L. record for being hit by pitches in a season (35) as he augmented his league-record career total to 227. Years from now when Sox fans discuss the soon-to-be legendary Dave Henderson blast that brought the Sox from behind in the ninth inning of Game 5 of the ALCS, a trivia question will be asked: "Who hit the one-out, two-run homer earlier in the inning to set up Hendu's momentous feat?" The answer, please remember, is Don Baylor.

BILL BUCKNER

First Baseman

"Scrap Iron." That's the name Bill Buckner was tagged with during his courageous 1986 season, a season played in untold pain from recurring ankle and leg injuries. And though the problem worsened as the season wore on, Bill Buckner's play just got better and better. As the Sox mounted their pennant drive, Buck slashed away at a .338 clip over the last two months (including .344 with men in scoring position). For the second straight campaign, Buckner drove in over 100 runs (102) and also established a personal best in homers (18). He put on one power surge in which he had back-to-back two-homer games against the Orioles and Yankees in mid-September. Adding to his reputation as one of the game's best contact/line drive hitters, Bill struck out only 25 times in 681 plate appearances, keeping alive an amazing streak of never having fanned more than 39 times in any of his 17 big league seasons. Buckner submitted to off-season ankle surgery in hopes of avoiding last year's injury nightmares. Judging from Bill's determination in '86, this is not yet where The Buck stops.

DENNIS BOYD

Pitcher

There are two answers to the question, "What Red Sox pitcher has won the most games over the past two years?" One of them is easy: Roger Clemens. But matching The Rocket's 31 wins over that period is Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, one of the most colorful, competitive, and effective pitchers in the American League. In just his second full big league season, the irrepressible "Can" won 16 games despite missing three weeks in mid-season with some personal problems and a suspension. Disregarding a turbulent six-week period in July and August, Boyd had a scintillating 15-6 record. Control has become The Can's trademark, as he walked more than two men in a game only three times in 30 starts. And, despite Boyd's slight frame, durability has become another Can characteristic, as he has completed an outstanding ratio of 33 games in 91 starts over the past three seasons. Always wanting to pitch the "Big Game," Dennis got his wish on September 28 as he beat the Blue Jays to clinch the A.L. East Championship for the Sox. Just 27 and recognized by many as the premier "number three" starter in the league, Dennis Boyd apparently has many more Big Games in his plans.

CALVIN SCHIRALDI

Pitcher

One of the big reasons the Sox were picked to finish in the A.L. East's second division during the pre-season last year was their apparent lack of a stopper out of the bullpen. And one of the big reasons all those "experts" were wrong was the emergence of that stopper... 24-year-old Calvin Schiraldi. Coming to the Sox from the Mets as part of the package for Bobby Ojeda, Calvin had a shaky spring and was sent to Pawtucket to work on his conversion from starter to reliever. He took to his new job immediately and by July 19, the Sox had seen enough; they summoned him to Boston and charged him with the "closing" responsibilities. His response: a win or a save in 12 of 13 save opportunities, a 1.41 ERA, and 55 strikeouts in 51 innings. So devastating was his fastball that he did a pretty decent imitation of his former U. of Texas teammate, Roger Clemens. An emerging Rocket out of the bullpen? It's Calvin Schiraldi.

In less than two months Dave Henderson went from Seattle Mariner starter to Boston Red Sox benchwarmer to American folk hero. Acquired from the Mariners on August 19, "Hendu" got only seven starts in the six remaining weeks of the regular season. But when Tony Armas came up lame in the post-season, Henderson took over as the centerfielder. In Game 5 of the ALCS against California, Dave stepped to the plate as the Red Sox' last chance ... behind three games to one in the series, one run down in the game, two outs in the ninth inning and a man on base. In one of the most dramatic blasts in Red Sox lore, Hendu's two-run go-ahead homer set up the eventual Boston win of both the game and the series. He continued his hot streak in the World Series (batting .400) and one of his two homers in the Classic was a dramatic 10th inning shot in Game 6 that gave his team a lead they were unable to hold. That kind of clutch play has the Sox excited about their prospects for '87 ... and about the prospect of having Dave Henderson in the line-up for a full season.

BOB STANLEY

Pitcher

It's easy to get lost among the Clemenses, Hursts, and Boyds, but Bob Stanley has, in his own right, put together one of the great pitching careers in Red Sox history. "Steamer" is one of only seven Sox hurlers to win 100 games; he has appeared in far more games (503) than any Sox pitcher ever; and he is the team's all-time leader in saves (123) and relief wins (74), also by wide margins. And while others grabbed the headlines in the championship season of '86, Bob Stanley again was the club's save leader with 16 as he moved from role to role as short man, middle man, long man, and even starter on one occasion. Bob was particularly effective in the first half of the season (3-0 with five saves in June) and then pitched in longer relief after Calvin Schiraldi took over the closer role in July. A testament to his effectiveness in tight situations was his excellent 83% success rate in protecting ties or leads. His experience showed in the World Series as he gave the Sox five scoreless appearances. If he is asked to perform several roles again in '87, Bob Stanley will be glad to accept a repeat performance.

If the Red Sox were going to win the 1986 pennant, they reasoned in mid-August, they'd need steadier play from the shortstop position. So, they went out and acquired Spike Owen from Seattle. The move had the desired effect, and the rest is history. Spike started 41 of 42 games after his acquisition and made only four errors, while going on to lead the league's shortstops in total chances and double plays. Though he was not acquired for his bat, Owen had his moments. In just his third game in a Boston uniform he had four hits (including his only homer of the season) on August 21 against Cleveland. In that game he tied a major league record by scoring six runs. (The only other A.L. player to do it, ironically, was former Red Sox player Johnny Pesky.) More "moments" came in the post-season for Spike, as he led the Sox with a .429 average in the ALCS and hit .300 in the World Series. But the Sox' favorite "moment" came the day they traded for Spike Owen, the day the final piece of the championship puzzle was put in place.

AL NIPPER

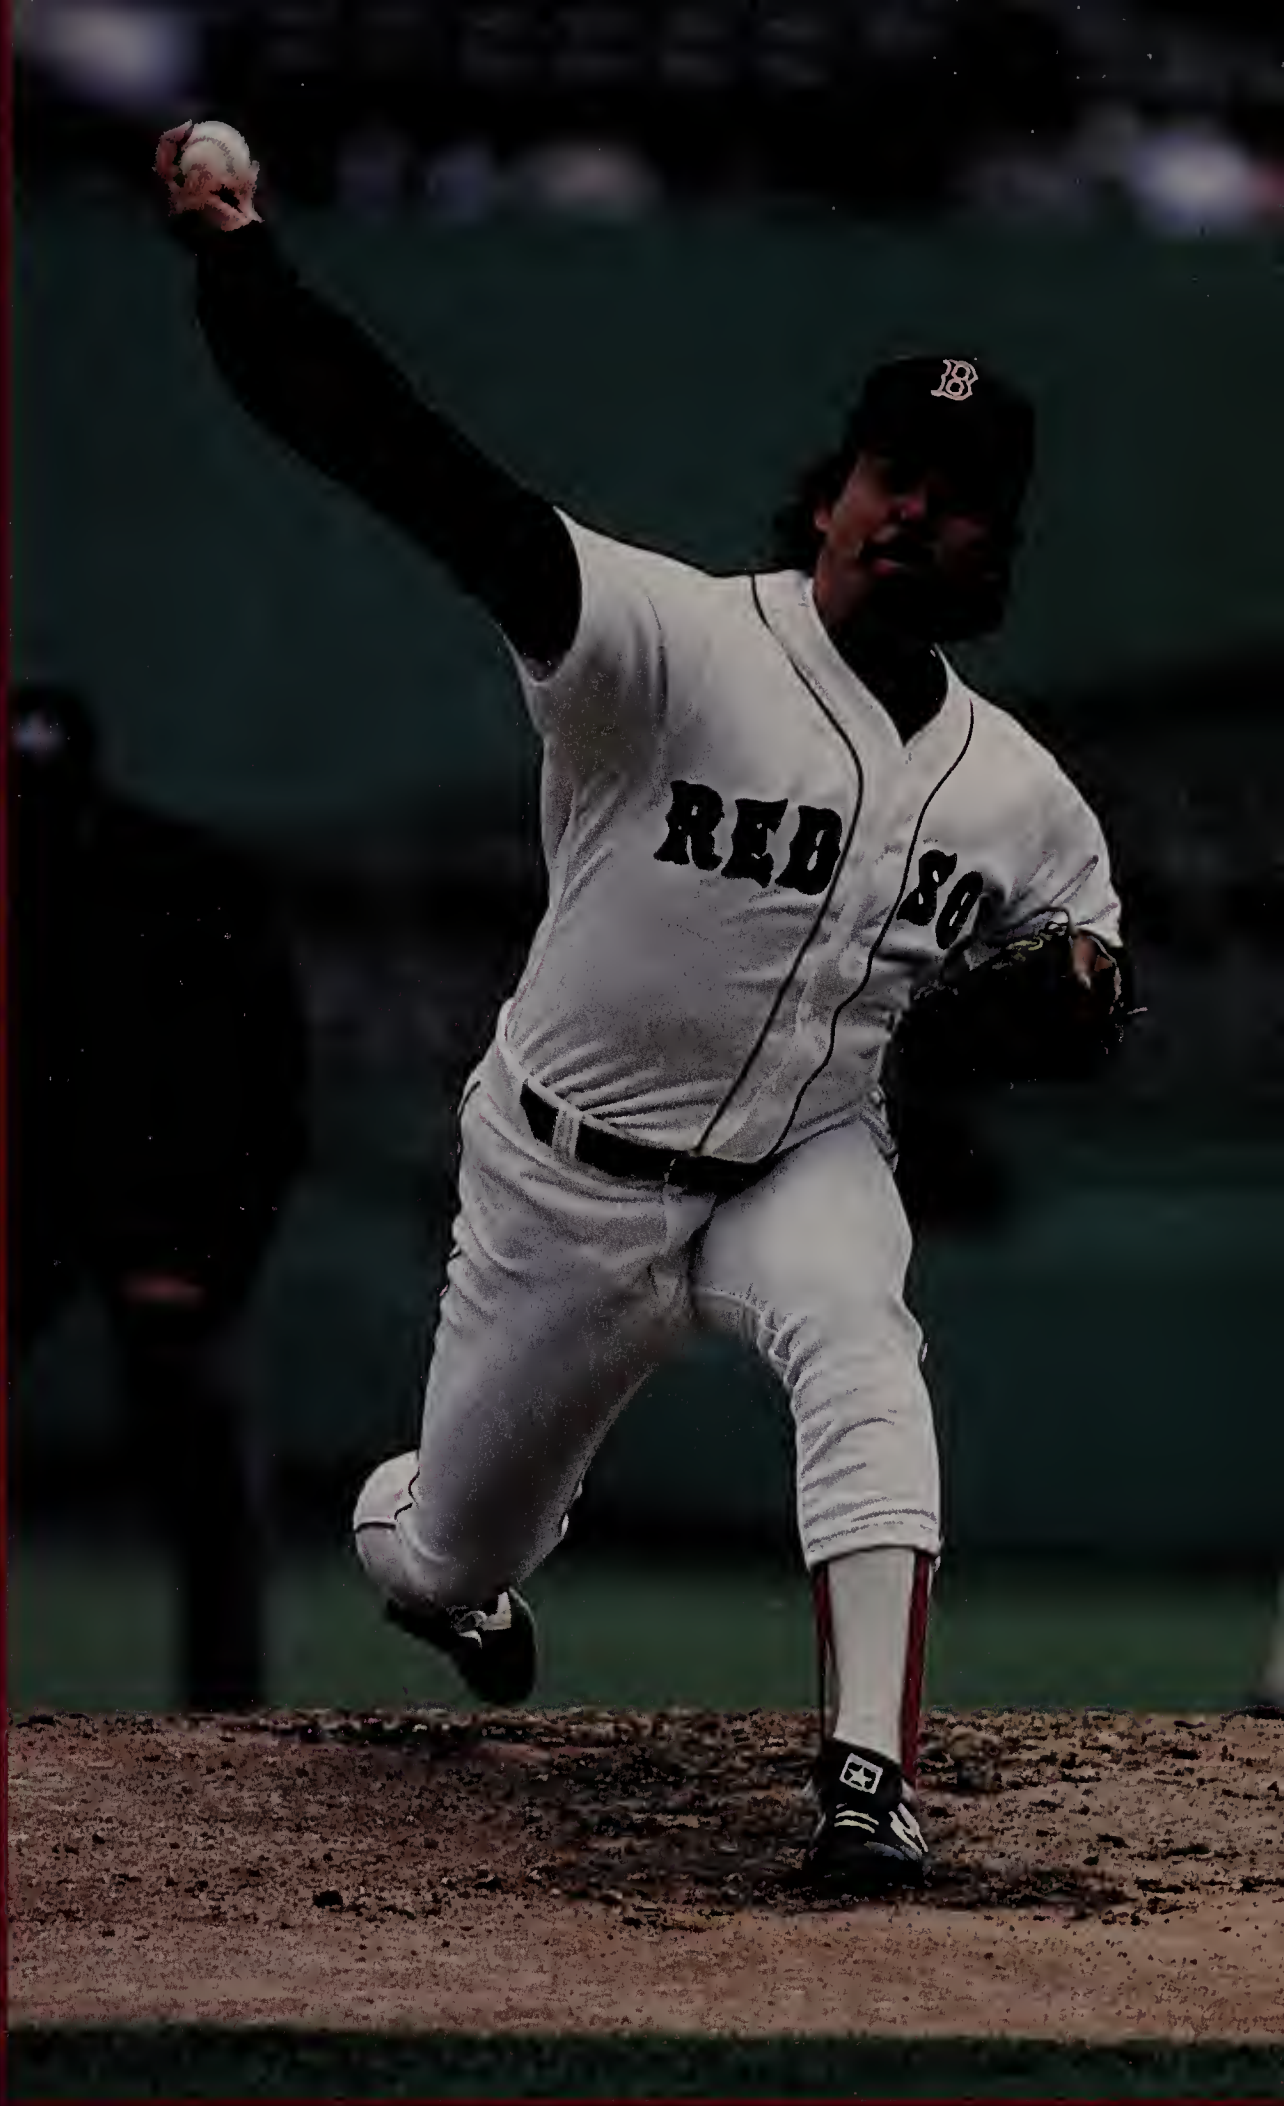

Pitcher

Everyone who watched the Sox in 1986 will remember Roger Clemens' 20-strikeout game, and the day the Sox clinched the East, and the historic Game 5 comeback in the ALCS, and the monumental ups and downs of the World Series. But the real Sox fans, the true aficionados, will vividly recall a more obscure game on June 25 ... a game just as important as any played during the entire year. Five weeks before, Al Nipper was putting together his usual solid season as the team's #4 starter (3.68 ERA in early May) when he rushed to cover home against Texas and collided with Ranger runner Larry Parrish. The result was a grotesque spike wound that severed a muscle near his kneecap and put "Nip" out of action for over a month. Then, on June 25 against the Yankees, he returned to the mound. The Yanks were on the verge of a three-game Fenway sweep and had crept to within four games of the division-leading Sox. But as he has done in tough situations throughout his career, Nipper gutted out seven strong innings and gave the Sox the momentum-reversing victory that started a new winning streak and left the Yanks in the dust. He had trouble finding his consistency after the injury, but Al Nipper stoically managed to contribute 10 wins (and an incalculable amount of inspiration) to the Sox' championship cause.

MARC SULLIVAN

Catcher

Catching. Any baseball man will tell you that it's the toughest commodity to find in quantity and quality. With last year's catcher, Rich Gedman, failing to re-sign for '87, the Red Sox were fortunate to be able to look to their bench and find quality in the person of Marc Sullivan, son of the team's CEO, Haywood Sullivan. Though he hit for power in the minors, Marc has never really batted enough in the majors to provide a true reading on his offensive skills. But even if his bat is proven to be just adequate, the Sox will be happy to start the season with a guy whom they regard as one of the league's best defensive backstops. Sullivan has a strong arm and is popular among the pitchers for his ability to call an intelligent game. Last year he contributed to the team's success by starting 35 games to rest Gedman. Marc distinguished himself in the clutch by hitting .281 with men in scoring position and he sacrificed himself for the cause by twice being hit by pitches with the bases loaded (once to win a game in the ninth against the Twins). Marc Sullivan has always been the kind of guy to make the most of his chances; he's likely to take full advantage of his opportunity to win the starting position in 1987.

STEVE CRAWFORD

Pitcher

Once one of the Red Sox' brightest young pitching prospects, Steve Crawford's career has been rudely interrupted by five stints on the disabled list in the last five years. When healthy, however, he has been a key member of the staff in a middle relief role. Last season Steve got off to a terrific start, going unscored upon in 10 of his first 11 appearances, only to go on the D.L. with a sore shoulder in mid-July for six weeks. Brought back slowly in September, he was healthy by playoff time when he made his greatest contribution of the season. In Game 5 of the ALCS with the game tied in the bottom of the ninth, "Shag" was called upon in a do-or-die, bases loaded, one-out situation. He coolly retired Doug DeCinces and Bobby Grich, preserving the tie and allowing the Sox to go on to win the game by one run in the 11th. It's the kind of thing a healthy Steve Crawford can do routinely. The Sox hope he finally has a chance to prove his talent over a full season in 1987.

JOE SAMBITO

Pitcher

Those who speculated that Joe Sambito's career was over following three serious elbow surgeries in 1982 and 1983 didn't know the man very well. A former National League All-Star, Joe underwent his first operation after nine games in 1982 and missed all of the following season as well. On the road back in 1984 and 1985 he pitched only 58 big league innings, was twice sent to the minors and was twice released (by the Astros and Mets). But in Venezuelan winter ball in '85 he showed the Sox something and, gambling as much on his heart as his arm, the team signed him. Sambito proved in 1986 what a valuable role player he can still be. Used primarily in short bursts to retire lefthanded hitters, Joe saved 12 games and led the Sox bullpen in both prevention of inherited runners from scoring (81%) and holding leads and ties (30 of 32, 94%). Other key Sambito stats were his limiting of the first batters he faced to a .200 average and allowing lefties to hit a mere .195 against him. He became a free agent last November, but the Sox re-signed him in a matter of weeks. Other teams may have let Joe Sambito get away, but the Sox weren't about to make the same mistake.

Greatest accomplishment in baseball:

Most embarrassing moment of career: Missing curfew on my first night in pro baseball (Columbus, GA in June, 1973)

Worst habit: Being co-operative when asked stupid questions

Goal for 1987: Make 1987 a little better than 1986

Plans after baseball: To be a player agent/representative

Forever Fenway

by Glenn Stout

Seventy-five seasons have passed since the sound of wood meeting leather first echoed through Fenway Park, seventy-five seasons since the left field wall first framed the flight of a long fly ball against its now storied surface. Baseball has long been Boston's most beloved pastime, and since 1912

Fenway Park has been the best place in the world to watch baseball.

Within the familiar confines of Fenway Park, the hopes of generations of players and fans have been played out around the diamond. And while Fenway Park may only hold some 35,000 spectators at a time, its capacity to house the cherished memories of millions is unsurpassed.

The tendency is to believe that Fenway Park is the same place today that it was seventy-five years ago. It is not. Just as the game of baseball has evolved from season to season, so has Fenway Park. The story is not so much history as it is biography, the record of a life. Over the course of seventy-five years, Fenway Park has matured from a raw rookie of unknown potential to a graceful, ageless member of an exclusive Hall of Fame.

(Above) "Breaking ground in 1911 for baseball's most famous landmark" (Left) Artist's illustration on the park's 1912 dedication invitation shows bleachers in right field although none were constructed until later that season.

When it opened in 1912 the most remarkable thing about Fenway Park was that absolutely nothing was remarkable about Fenway Park. Only its local novelty made it special. Fenway was just another new ballpark, much like several others built at about the same time, and was spectacular only in its simplicity.

Major league ballparks used to be built out of wood. But wood burns, and in the early 1900s it became difficult to insure ballparks against potential disaster. So in 1909 the Philadelphia Athletics became the first club to take advantage of contemporary technology, building Shibe Park out of non-flammable concrete and steel. Following suit, in 1911 John I. Taylor decided he would build a new concrete and steel ballpark for his ballclub, the Boston Red Sox.

Before 1912, the Red Sox played their games at the Huntington Avenue Grounds. But while Taylor owned the ballpark itself, he leased the land from the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad. It was an uncomfortable situation which could become a liability were the Red Sox ever sold—and Taylor had his mind on selling. A new ballpark would increase the value of his investment. Besides, Taylor had the perfect site in mind.

The area known as the Fenway in Boston had been an unsightly and ill-smelling mudflat until landscape architect Frederick Law Olmstead's artful manipulation of the earth turned swampland into parkland in the late 1880s. The land surrounding the Fenway became a real estate speculator's dream—cheap, undeveloped, and in an ideal location adjacent to the city's expanding streetcar lines. Taylor happened to own an interest in the Fenway Realty Company, which owned a good part of the Fenway. So when Taylor needed a place to build his new ballpark, he in effect sold himself an empty plot of land on Jersey Street.

Contrary to popular belief, Fenway Park's dimensions are due more to the peculiar placement of the ballpark upon that site (and to various changes in the game itself) than to the shape of the piece of land or the configuration of surrounding streets. As designed by architect James McLaughlin, the new park retained an orientation similar to the Huntington Avenue Grounds. Games at that time began at three in the afternoon, and care was taken that the setting sun would not shine in the batters' eyes. Had its orientation on the property been shifted only a few degrees in either direction, Fenway Park could have been a very different, larger place today.

Fenway Park, now the smallest park in the major leagues, was actually one of baseball's largest when it first opened. But it really didn't matter how big or oddly shaped Fenway Park was in its early years as the game rarely reached the outer limits of the field. The era's "dead ball," much less lively than today's ball, made even the left field corner (only 320' from home plate) next to unreachable.

BOSTON-AMERICAN LEAGUE CHAMPIONS—1912

The 1912 World Champion Red Sox positioned in front of this early season park scene. Note the parking lot between the center field bleachers and the right field pavilion as well as the open territory beyond the left field pavilion.

No one could anticipate the changes in the game that have since made Fenway Park appear to shrink in size. In the ballpark's early years the outfield fence merely served to keep out non-paying customers, while the perimeter of the field itself was designed to provide room for overflow crowds. As a barrier to the batted ball, the fence was incidental.

It appeared as if baseball itself was incidental to Taylor as he undertook construction. The enterprise was first and foremost a real estate venture; he used the ballpark to help draw attention to the surrounding area and enhance its value. Even the park's name, which he credited to its location asking rhetorically "It's in the Fenway, isn't it?" served to promote real estate instead of baseball. Taylor broke ground for the new park on September 25, 1911, and that December he indulged in profit-taking, selling the club to a group headed by James McAleer.

As a result of the sale, the structure eventually built by the Osborn Engineering Company differed considerably from architect McLaughlin's original design. Bleachers were originally intended to stretch from the right field pavilion to center field, but the space in right instead became a parking lot. Concrete foundations in the center field bleachers and the right field pavilion were designed to support modern concrete and steel stands, but wooden stands were built in their place. No seats at all were planned to parallel the left field line. Only the main grandstand was built precisely to plan, and even that barely extended beyond third base.

The wooden bleachers, the single-decked grandstand, even the sod transplanted from the Huntington Avenue Grounds hearkened back to the older, wooden parks of a rapidly disappearing era. All other new parks favored the increased seating capacity a double-deck provided. But Boston fans reportedly were wary of the feature, and Red Sox management, perhaps anxious to keep costs down, built only a single tier. Nonetheless, care was taken to make sure that foundations were sufficient to support a second deck, were one ever desired.

Fenway Firsts

On April 20, 1912 New York's Harry Wolter had the first base hit in Fenway Park, an infield single.

The first Red Sox hit was a first inning double by Steve Yerkes in the same contest. He went on to score the Red Sox' first run in Fenway Park.

Hugh Bradley of the Red Sox hit the first homerun in Fenway Park over the left field wall on April 26, 1912 off Lefty Russell of Philadelphia.

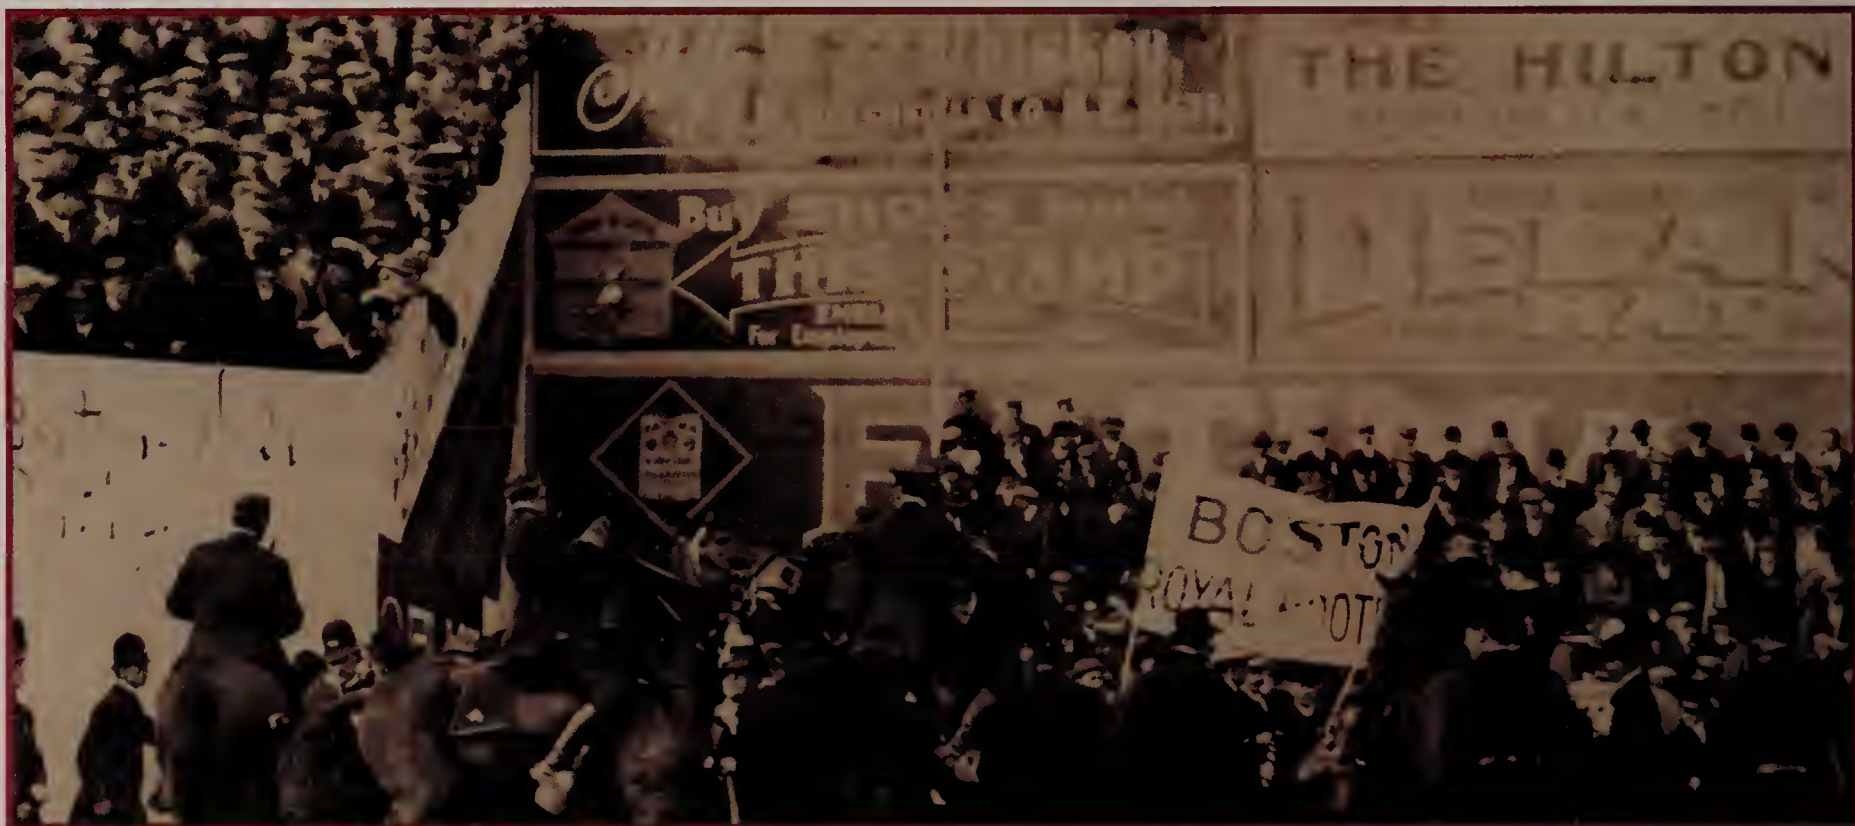

The Red Sox played their first Sunday game at Fenway Park on July 3, 1932, losing to the Yankees 13-2.

On July 13, 1947 the Red Sox played the first night game at Fenway Park, beating the White Sox 5-3.

Baseball was first televised in Fenway Park in 1948.

The Red Sox first installed an organ for between innings entertainment in 1960.

A television camera was first placed in The Wall during the 1975 World Series.

In early years, overflow crowds sat on Fenway's grass. Before Game 6 of the 1912 World Series began, mounted police tried to dissuade "The Royal Rooters" from taking up their usual (but already occupied) seating area on Duffy's Cliff.

What would later prove to be a glorious inaugural season at Fenway Park started off rather quietly. Boston fans took their first look of the new facility on April 9, 1912, as the Red Sox played host to the Harvard baseball team in an exhibition game. Only 3,000 shivering fans braved snow flurries to witness a weather-shortened, 2-0 Red Sox victory. The Sox then went on the road, but returned for their scheduled home opener on April 18.

Two days of rain prevented play until Patriots' Day on Saturday, April 20. A capacity crowd of over 27,000 fans witnessed a sloppy 11-inning, 7-6 Red Sox win over the New York Highlanders (Yankees). Bleacher seats cost 25 cents, and the pavilion a half dollar, while grandstand spectators sat in seats numbered in gold leaf.

Public reaction to the new park was generally positive, although some complained that the bleachers were too far away from the action. An electric scoreboard in left attracted considerable attention, as did the backstop screen, both major league firsts. But observers were most impressed with the easy access and egress to the park, as eighteen turnstiles, more than at any other park but New York's Polo Grounds, kept lines moving.

The Red Sox themselves reacted well to their new surroundings in 1912, winning the American League pennant. They compiled a home record of 57-20 and a league-best season mark of 105-47. The club went on to beat the New York Giants in eight games that October in Fenway Park's first World Series, an event that spurred the erection of bleachers in right and along the left field line.

Victory was commonplace those first few seasons, as the Red Sox went on to win pennants in 1915, 1916, and 1918. The 1915 and 1916 World Series were, however, played at the newer, larger Braves Field. Ironically, the National League Boston Braves, champions themselves in 1914, played their World Series home games that year at Fenway Park while awaiting the completion of their new park in Allston.

While Fenway Park remained relatively unchanged during those early years, the game of baseball, quite unexpectedly, began to change drastically due primarily to the efforts of one of Fenway's young stars. His name was George Herman "Babe" Ruth.

While the Babe began his career with the Red Sox in 1914 as a pitcher, it was his prowess in the batter's box at Fenway Park that altered the game forever. As a part-time outfielder in 1918, Ruth smashed 11 homeruns to tie for the major league crown. A year later he increased his total to an amazing 29 (almost three times the runner-up's total), thus setting a new major league season record.

Suddenly the outfield fence did more than control crowds. It became something to hit homeruns over. Ruth's ability with the bat and the subsequent introduction of a more lively ball in 1920 made the playing field seem smaller literally overnight. Fans thrilled to the new power game and baseball's popularity soared. Except in Fenway Park.

James Lannin, who had bought the club in 1913 from McAleer, sold out to one Harry Frazee in 1917. Frazee was in the entertainment business, not the baseball business, and was more concerned with supporting the former with the profits of the latter. On January 5, 1920 he sold the Babe to New York Yankee owner Jacob Ruppert for $125,000 and a $350,000 mortgage on Fenway Park. He might as well have sold the park outright.

Over the next three years most of Ruth's talented teammates followed him to New York, and Red Sox victories became increasingly rare. Although it would be years before the Red Sox would procure players capable of approaching Ruth's production, the future of Fenway Park as a homerun haven was assured.

Frazee sold the franchise in 1923 to Bob Quinn, who inherited both a ballclub and a ballpark in states of decline. Underfinanced from the start, Quinn could do little to remedy either situation. Without a Red Sox line-up stocked with power hitters, Fenway Park seemed ill-suited to the changing nature of the game. In eight of the 10 years of Quinn's ownership, the Red Sox finished last in the American League.

Conditions reached a nadir in 1926. On May 8, shortly after the end of a ballgame, a fire erupted in the left field bleachers. The wooden structure quickly burned to the ground and only the heroic efforts of area workers, who aimed garden hoses at the grandstand roof, saved the rest of the park. One day before, two smaller fires had been extinguished in the same area. After the third blaze, Quinn quietly collected the insurance, had the charred timbers hauled away, and left the scene as it was.

The Red Sox finished that season 46-108, their worst record to date, and for the rest of Quinn's reign the barren foul ground along the left field line served as a grim reminder of his ineffectiveness. In 1928 Quinn made overtures to abandon Fenway Park for Braves Field, but the Braves turned down his proposal. As the Depression took hold following the financial crash in 1929, fans at Fenway Park became as rare as Red Sox victories. The Red Sox franchise and Fenway Park were in serious trouble. They both needed a savior.

The Babe, who changed the game of baseball with his bat, was also a Fenway hero on the mound.

World War I spawned new marketing approaches—and two bits got you into the park.

When Tom Yawkey turned thirty years old on February 21, 1933, he received a family inheritance worth at least seven million Depression dollars. Four days later he bought the Red Sox and immediately embarked on an ambitious program to restock the team's talent and restore the public's confidence. His efforts paid an immediate dividend in 1932 as home attendance jumped to more than 600,000, an amazing increase over the previous season's total of 182,150. Encouraged by the response of Boston's fans, Yawkey then turned his attention to rebuilding Fenway Park.

Construction began in the fall of 1933. While the NFL Boston Redskins were using the park for football, work started in left field. Duffy's Cliff, the ten-foot high earthen embankment which stretched the length of the left field wall, was dug up and hauled away, leaving only a subtle rise in its wake to serve as a warning track. The wooden left field wall itself was replaced by a concrete and tin structure that included an expanded scoreboard featuring both AL and NL scores as well as a unique "traffic light" color scheme to denote balls and strikes.

When the football season ended, construction expanded to every area of the park. Wooden seats in center and right were ripped out and replaced by concrete stands as had originally been planned. The grandstand was enlarged to its current size and the foundations reinforced to provide support for a still dreamed-of second deck.

A four-foot high fence was placed atop the grandstand to prevent foul balls from bounding off the roof to the street. As finishing touches, the Jersey Street facade was sandblasted and a total of 15,708 new seats were installed.

While the Boston Redskins played football (note goalpost), reconstruction began in left field, behind the moveable stands. Note the pre-reconstruction wooden centerfield bleachers in this September 30, 1933 scene.

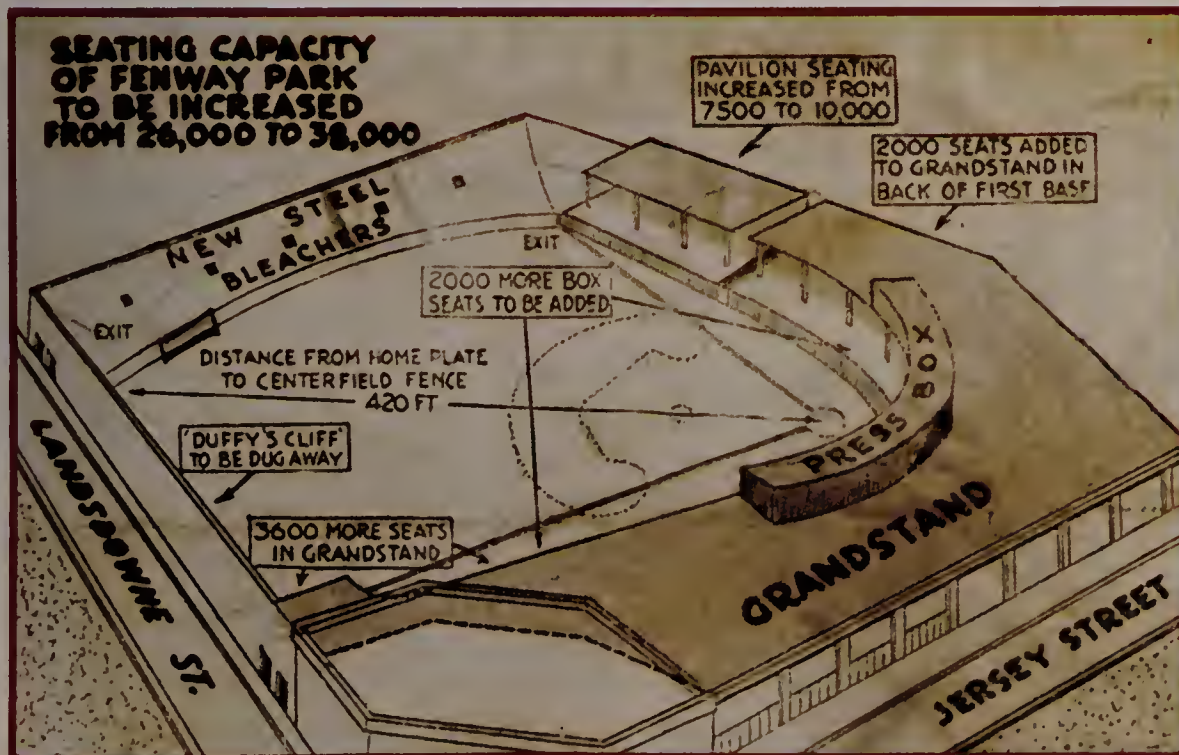

Outfield dimensions changed from 320' in left to a reported 315' (although blueprints show the distance as 308'), from 468' in center to 420', and from 358' in right to 334'. With an official seating capacity of 37,500 (up from 27,642 the previous season) Fenway Park became the sixth largest park in baseball.

Ironically, fourteen years to the day after the sale of Ruth, disaster struck again. On January 5, 1934 a fire broke out in the wooden formwork below the center field bleachers, causing structural damage necessitating their reconstruction. Insurance covered the quarter million dollar loss and up to 1,000 union workers labored in two daily shifts to complete the park by Opening Day.

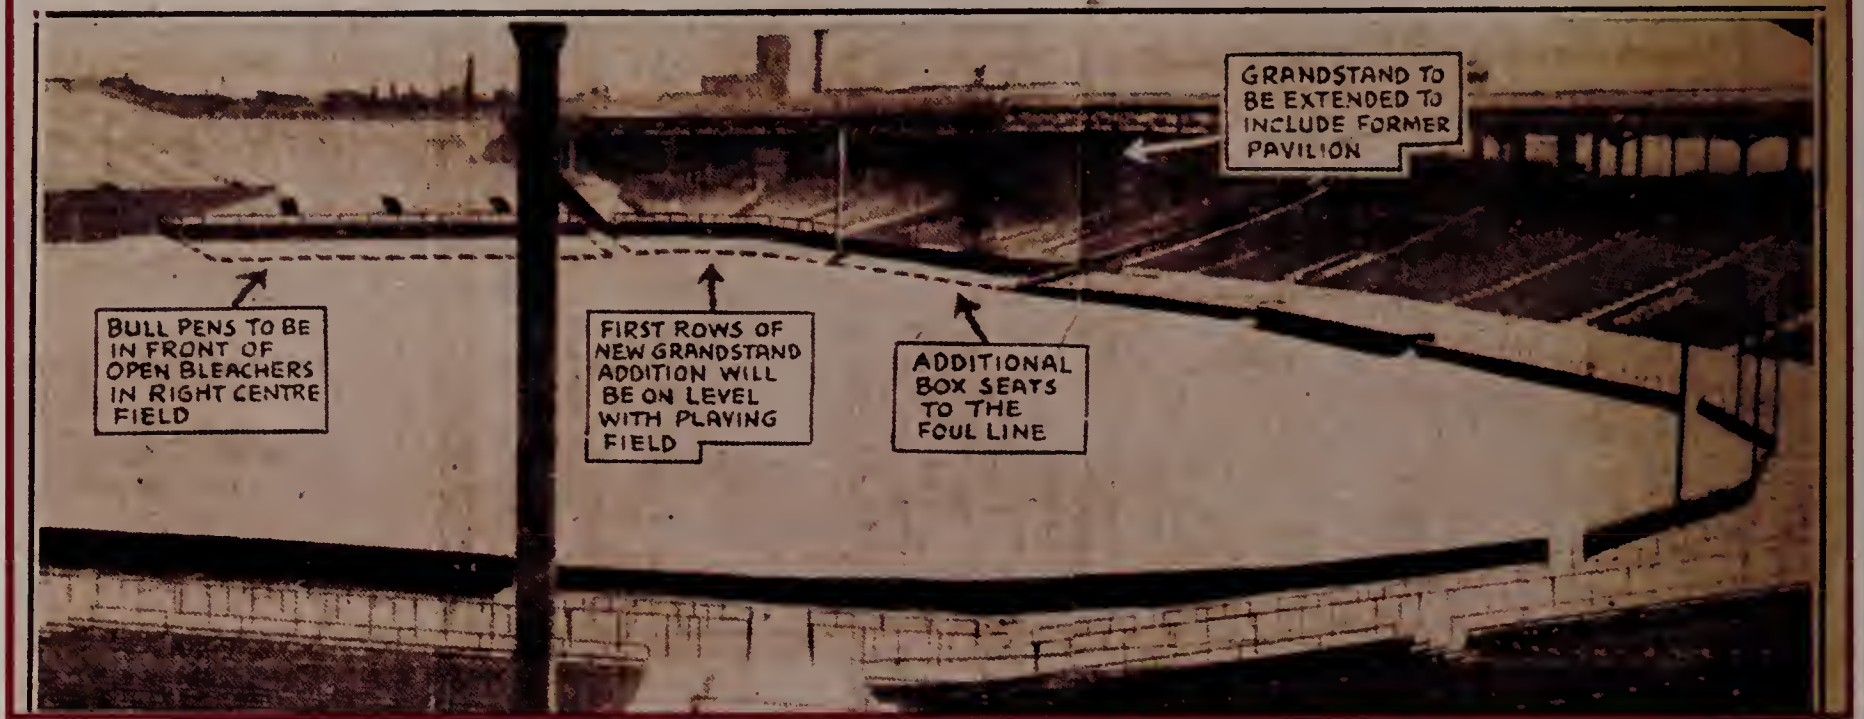

Fenway Park's current identity owes much to the 1934 reconstruction. The entire park was painted green and seating areas were built to appear as part of a single, unified structure. Fenway finally began to look like a ballpark was supposed to look. All it lacked was a winning team.

PROPOSED CHANGES IN SEATING AT FENWAY PARK

How Williamsburg Will Look Next Season

New Fenway Park opened on April 17, 1934 as the Sox lost to the Senators, 6-5. However, Yawkey's investment in quality ballplayers continued to pay off. His team finished the season with a .500 record, the first time the club had reached that mark since the Babe's 1918 World Champion team. A decade of slow but steady improvement followed as the Red Sox tried to find a Ruthian player around which to build a team. His arrival signaled even more changes for the ballpark.

Ted Williams reached the major leagues in 1939, and most subsequent modifications to the park were made to suit his hitting style. Following his rookie year the bullpens in the right field corner were moved in front of the right field bleachers, cutting down the homerun distance by some 22' and creating "Williamsburg." Box seats were added in front of the right field grandstand, shortening the distance down the line to 302', all but eradicating foul territory in that area. Billboards were removed from everywhere except the left field wall, improving the background for both hitters and fielders.

Williams' arrival signaled new renovations designed to exploit his considerable talents.

When Williams returned from his World War II stint in 1946, skyview seats were added on either side of the press box. The Red Sox posted a stellar 61-16 mark at Fenway Park that year and drew over one million fans for the first time. Fenway Park was once again the site of the World Series, which the Red Sox dropped to the St. Louis Cardinals in seven games.

Over the next few seasons, while the Sox continued to challenge for the pennant, Yawkey made further improvements to the park. The left field wall was stripped of billboards in 1947 and painted its now familiar green. Lights were also added that year, making Fenway Park, along with Yankee Stadium, one of the two brightest parks in baseball. Fenway Park has, for the most part, looked the same ever since. Attitudes toward the park changed, however, as did the fortunes of the team.

In the 1950s fans became frustrated by the Red Sox' failure to remain a championship caliber ballclub, and Fenway Park became a convenient scapegoat. Even the players, the press, and Red Sox management began to blame the park for the team's troubles. Across town, the Braves abandoned Boston at the end of 1952 for a sleek new ballpark in Milwaukee. The Boston public began to feel cheated. Not only was Fenway Park the cause of the Red Sox' losing, it was just plain old-fashioned. An antique like Fenway Park seemed to have no place in Boston, and by the late 1950s attendance had slid back below the one million mark.

It seemed as though baseball's most successful franchises owed their fiscal health to new facilities built with civic funds. In 1958 the Red Sox tried to convince city officials to allow the club to annex Lansdowne Street for expansion purposes, but the city had no desire to help perpetuate an emerging anachronism. Campaigns for new stadiums were underway in most big league cities, and Boston was no exception.

Williams and The Wall in 1947 (billboards were removed later that year). Note the longer scoreboard and, in the distance, the Cities Service sign (now Citgo).

Several plans and designs were presented by developers to city and state officials in the late 50s and early 60s, most for a multi-purpose super-stadium to be located either in the Fenway or South Station area. Weak city government, however, combined with anti-Boston bias at the state level subverted these efforts. In the interim, Fenway Park slipped further into public disfavor. Interest in the team reached an all-time low on September 28 and 29 of 1965 as back-to-back games against the Angels drew 461 and 409 fans, respectively. Only a miracle could restore Fenway Park.

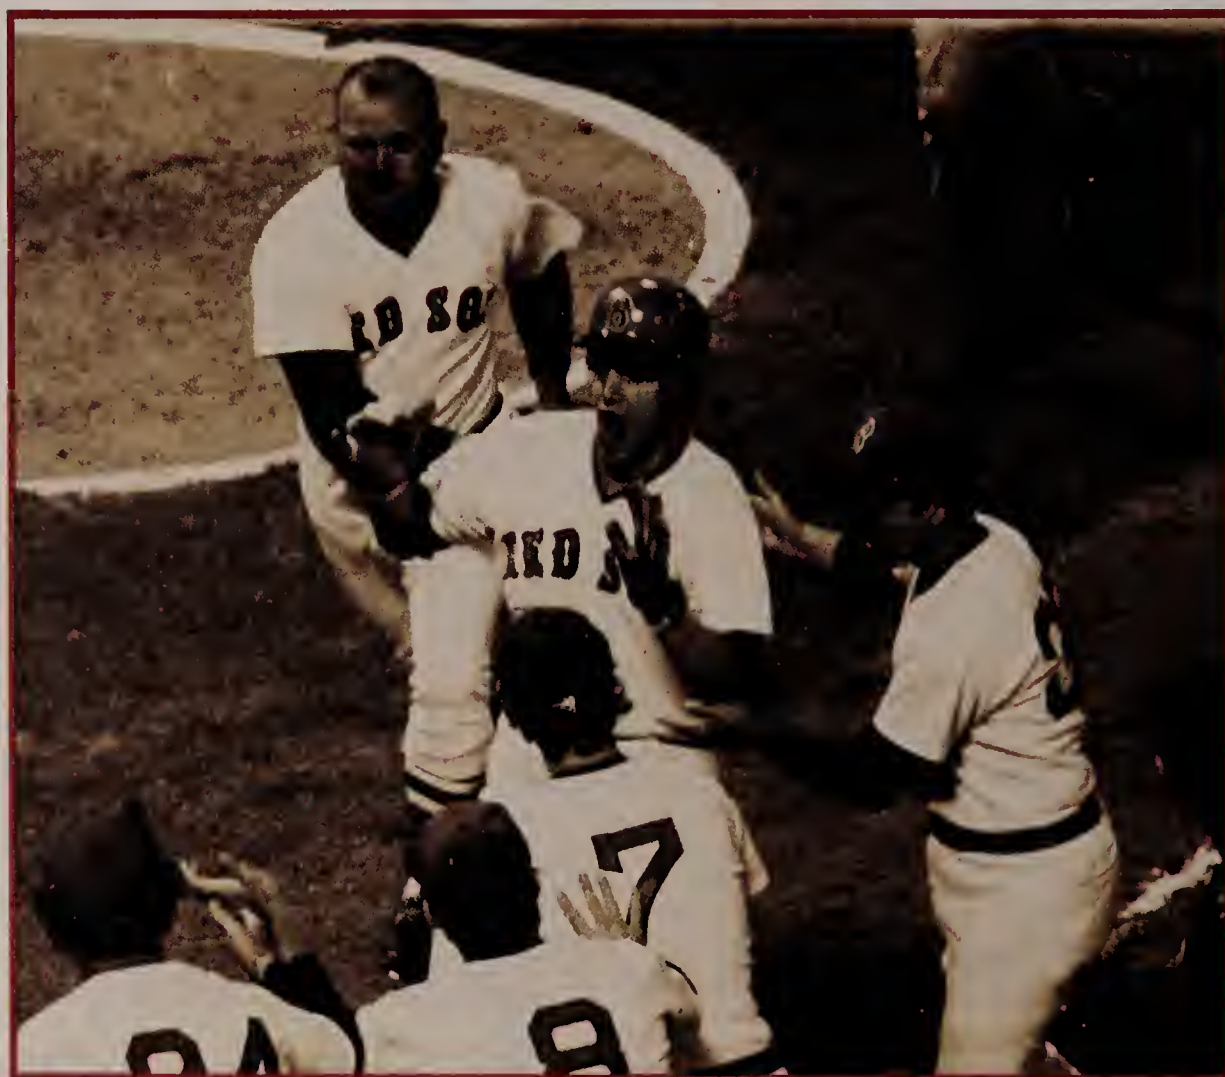

The miracle happened. Like Lazarus, the Red Sox rose from the dead. Led by yet another Ruthian hero, Carl Yastrzemski, the Impossible Dream became plausible as the 1967 Red Sox captured the American League championship and rekindled interest in both the club and the park. Attendance more than doubled from the previous year with over 1.7 million fans rediscovering the discrete joy of baseball in Fenway Park.

Elsewhere in major league baseball,

(Below) Fenway played host to what many believe was the greatest baseball game ever played. Carlton Fisk ended Game 6 of the 1975 World Series by dancing to the plate in the twelfth inning after waving a homerun into the screen.

park of Fenway's era were being condemned and destroyed with reckless abandon. Monuments like Cincinnati's Crosley Field, Philadelphia's Connie Mack Stadium, and Pittsburgh's Forbes Field all faced the wrecker's ball. But in Boston, fans discovered they were in love with their park. The calls for Fenway Park's demise ceased as the public's newfound reverence ushered in an era of preservation.

Throughout the 1970s the Red Sox management began to revitalize the ballpark. In 1971 a workout area for the players was built beneath the center field bleachers. In 1974 new red and blue plastic seats were installed. In the 1975 pennant-winning season, at the cost of $1.5 million, a new electronic scoreboard was built. The left field scoreboard was reduced in size by half and centered, and the press box was enclosed. Also in 1975, the facade of the Green Monster was torn down and replaced. The original facade was cut into pieces and sold to support the Red Sox' official charity, The Jimmy Fund.

In 1980, under the direction of co-owners Jean Yawkey, Haywood Sullivan, and Buddy LeRoux, the Red Sox began a multi-year refurbishing program that helped to modernize and preserve the park while still respecting its unique personality. Pilings and foundations were reinforced to support new luxury boxes along the rooftops. The clubhouse was refurbished and team offices redesigned. Lighting was upgraded and the grandstand roof replaced. Indeed, Fenway had never looked better than for the 1986 American League Champion Red Sox.

At age 75 Fenway Park has proved to be an inseparable partner to baseball in New England. In other cities games are played on carpets, under glass, in punchbowls built for football. But in Boston, the earth, the sky, and the ballgame reign supreme. Here the game of baseball is enhanced and uplifted, and the passions of those who both watch and play the game are brought into a brighter, sharper focus. In Fenway Park nine fielders and one lone batsman gather around a diamond, and we return each game, each season, to see what happens next. In Boston, you don't just go see a baseball game, you go to Fenway.

Ten Fenway Facts

Fenway's field is bordered by 17 different facets and barriers.

The outfield fence is 3'6" high in right, 5'4" in front of the bullpen, and 17' high in front of the bleachers.

No one has ever hit a baseball out of Fenway Park in right field.

The distance from home plate to the back wall behind the center field bleachers is 536 feet.

The flag in center field is 12 feet by 18 feet.

The Wall is 37'2" tall and 240' long.

In 1936 a screen was added on top of The Wall. Set at a 45 degree angle, it is 23'4" tall.

The scoreboard is hand operated and contains a telephone, a refrigerator, and a small bathroom.

Scoreboard numbers denoting runs and hits are 16"x16" and weigh three pounds, while the others are only 12"x16" and weigh two pounds.

The initials of Thomas A. Yawkey and wife Jean R. Yawkey appear in morse code, vertically on the scoreboard.

Capped off with modern renovations including rooftop luxury boxes and an electronic scoreboard, Fenway endures as the diamond of the Hub.

There's one in every crowd.

It's the person who's always trying to get a little closer to the action. The one who pushes right up to the sidelines to get more out of the event. Some people call them sports fanatics. We call them Boston Globe reporters.

Sometimes they're in the press box. Other times they're right down next to the action. And they're always out to get one thing—the kind of story that's made us one of the top sports sections in the country year after year after year.

Which means tomorrow, when you want to read about what you've seen today, you can be sure of one thing. You'll find it all in The Globe.

1912. FENWAY PARK OPENS. AND THE RED SOX GO ON TO WIN THE WORLD SERIES.

April 20, 1912. Boston's new Fenway Park opens before 27,000 fans as the Red Sox beat the New York Highlanders (now the Yankees) 7-6. The famous Tis Speaker drives in the winning run in the eleventh inning.

Pitcher Joe Wood wins 34 games that year, including 18 at Fenway, and the Sox finish the season with 105 victories for a .691 average — all of them team records that still stand.

And Boston wins its third league pennant in 10 years. Then takes New York in the World Series four games to three, with one tie.

Today, some 3,200 home wins since that momentous 1912 opener, Fenway is one of the most revered parks in baseball — one of the oldest in the nation.

And Delta is one of the best known names in air travel. Serving 230 major cities via Delta and our partners, "The Delta Connection," Coast to coast. To Hawaii, Mexico, Canada and Alaska. Bermuda, The Bahamas and Puerto Rico. Europe and Japan.

Winning pennants of our own. Year after year Delta's professionals have earned for us the top ranking among U.S. airlines for personal service and attention. Like the Red Sox, Delta has made winning our finest tradition.
